PMMSY: Empowering India's Fisheries Sector and Blue Economy

Behind the bustle of a fish market lies a world of works-connecting fishers, fish farmers, ice-plant workers, transporters and traders in a chain of livelihoods that stretches far beyond the water's edge.This connection between production, storage, transport and sale is central to understanding the fisheries sector.

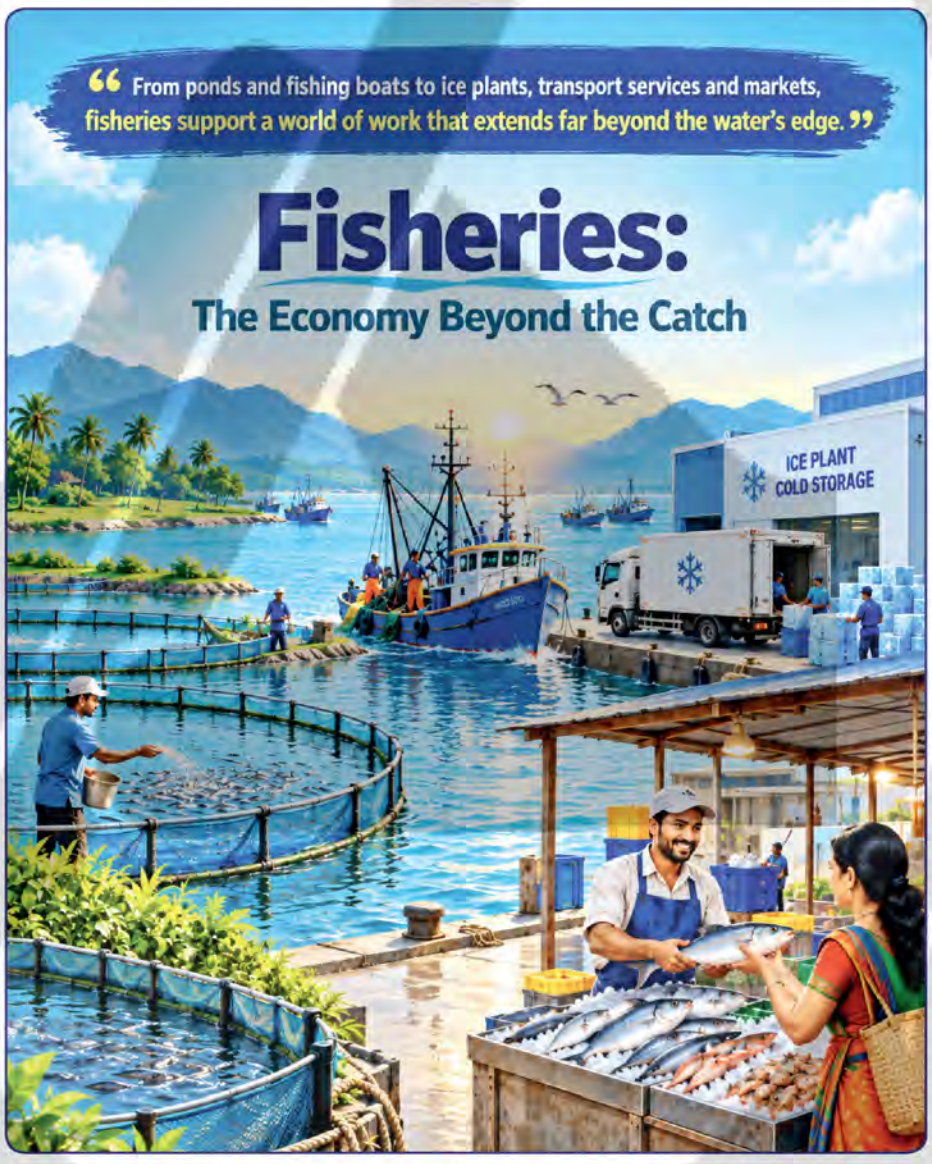

In India, fisheries sustain nearly three crore livelihoods, with particular importance for coastal and marginalised communities. Their contribution extends from household incomes and food supplies to employment and export earnings. The sector's significance, therefore, cannot be measured by the size of the catch alone. It also lies in the opportunities connected with bringing that catch to market.

This is where the idea of the blue economy becomes relevant to everyday life. In fisheries, it means linking the use of aquatic resources with food, work and income, while protecting those resources for the future. The water matters, but so do the people and businesses whose livelihoods depend on it.

Beyond Marine Fisheries

The familiar image of fishing is a boat returning to shore. Yet a substantial part of the sector's activity also takes place away from the coast-in ponds and reservoirs where fish are reared. Fisheries development includes inland areas, Himalayan and North-Eastern States and Union Territories, alongside coastal and marine regions. This broadens the reach of the sector beyond communities traditionally associated with sea fishing.

Supporting production across these different settings is one of the purposes of the Pradhan Mantri Matsya Sampada Yojana (PMMSY), launched in 2020. Its coverage includes improved fish-rearing practices, training, disease monitoring and facilities that connect production with markets. Support for ponds and cages used to rear fish in reservoirs forms part of this effort.

An important question is how to increase production without using more land and water than necessary. Some farming systems filter and reuse water after removing waste. Another method, called bio-floc, uses beneficial microbes that help clean the water and form small clumps that fish can eat. Although the techniques differ, both seek to make more efficient use of resources while supporting fish production.

The range of activities is widening too. Seaweed cultivation and ornamental fish rearing offer forms of enterprise beyond producing fish for food. Support for these activities recognises that fisheries are not a single occupation, but a group of related pursuits with different requirements and possibilities.

The Work that Follows the Catch

Producing fish is only part of the task. Preserving its quality until it reaches the buyer is equally important. Ice, cold storage and transport may receive less attention than fishing boats or ponds, but they help connect production with sale. PMMSY's infrastructure support covers these facilities, along with fishing harbours, places where boats unload their catch, and retail and wholesale markets.

Consider the role of ice. It does not increase the number of fish caught, but it helps keep the catch fresh and reduce spoilage during fishing operations. Its value lies in protecting what has already been produced. The same principle explains why storage and transportation are important parts of fisheries development: the journey to market must receive attention alongside the work in the water.

These supporting activities also make fisheries relevant to people who do not catch or rear fish themselves. Running an ice plant, operating a transport service, managing storage or selling through a fish outlet are distinct kinds of work. Approved projects under PMMSY include facilities for each of these activities, including live fish vending units, kiosks and markets.

This is the wider livelihood connection. Production creates the need for services, while those services help producers reach buyers. A fish farmer's access to a market and a transporter's business may involve different occupations, but they are connected through the movement of the same produce.

A Journey that Reaches Overseas

The market for Indian fisheries produce extends beyond the country's borders. The six-year review of PMMSY reports that fisheries export earnings increased from Rs. 46,663 crore in 2019–20 to Rs. 73,890 crore in 2025–26. These sector-wide figures illustrate the growing value of overseas trade alongside the sector's role in domestic food supplies and livelihoods.

Exports, however, are not an activity that begins only when a consignment leaves India. They are connected to the work that comes before it: production, careful handling, storage and transportation. The scheme's support also includes quality certification and systems for tracking fish through the stages of production and sale. These measures sit alongside investments in the physical facilities that help produce reach markets.

For the common reader, the connection is straightforward. A stronger presence in overseas markets depends on more than having fish available to sell. Producers also need links with the services and buyers that make trade possible. Export growth and local livelihood opportunities are therefore connected through the work carried out at many stages.

The opportunity is not simply to sell more abroad, but to improve the connections through which fishers, fish farmers and related businesses participate in the market. Continued support for production and market access is intended to opportunities for higher incomes, while fisheries contribute to the economy through employment and export earnings.

Making Participation Easier

Access to facilities is one part of supporting livelihoods. Access to finance, insurance and collective representation is another.

PMMSY provides assistance for Fish Farmers Producer Organisations, which bring fishers and fish farmers together and aim to strengthen their bargaining power. Such support recognises that production alone does not determine a small producer's position in the marketplace; the ability to organise and deal collectively with economic concerns also matters.

The National Fisheries Digital Platform provides a single digital system through which beneficiaries can access institutional credit, aquaculture insurance and other services. It also supports cooperatives and training. Alongside this, the scheme covers fisher safety, insurance and livelihood support—needs that extend beyond raising output or building facilities.

Together, these areas show the different requirements of people working in fisheries. A pond, boat or sales outlet is part of the picture. Skills, financial access and protection against risks are part of it too.

Keeping the Source of Livelihoods Secure

The fisheries economy ultimately depends on the resources that sustain it. Its long-term development therefore involves not only production and trade, but also responsible use of water and aquatic life. PMMSY includes support for resource-efficient fish farming and conservation, while its coastal village initiative addresses climate resilience through infrastructure, livelihoods and facilities for handling fish after harvest.

This brings the different parts of the sector together. Better production methods address what happens in the water. Storage and transport address what happens afterwards. Markets connect produce with buyers, while finance, training and collective organisations support the people involved.

Seen in this way, fisheries are neither only a rural occupation nor only an export business. They connect food, enterprise and livelihoods across several stages of economic activity. Their contribution to the blue economy lies in these connections—and in sustaining the aquatic resources on which they depend.

New Law Recognises Digital Banking Records as Evidence

The Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 2026 came into force on October 1, 2026 replacing the Bankers' Books Evidence Act of 1891. The new law updates the legal framework governing the use of banking records as evidence and aligns it with present-day digital banking practices. It establishes a technology-neutral system covering physical, electronic and digital records. Certified copies of bank records may be admitted as evidence in court proceedings, arbitrations, investigations and statutory inquiries, subject to prescribed authentication and security requirements. The reform is expected to reduce procedural delays and make the evidentiary system more suitable for an increasingly digital financial sector.

Green Energy Corridor 3.0 to Integrate Renewable Power into National Grid

The Union Cabinet has approved the third phase of the Green Energy Corridor programme to facilitate the large-scale integration of renewable energy into India's national power system. As solar and wind capacity expands across the country, the scheme will create the transmission and storage infrastructure required to carry this electricity from generation centres to consumers. The Rs. 1,86,405-crore scheme will strengthen intra-state transmission networks and enable the evacuation of up to 135 GW of renewable power across States and Union Territories. This will help ensure that electricity generated at renewable-energy projects is transmitted efficiently to the grid. The scheme also provides for 50 GWh of Battery Energy Storage Systems. These systems will store surplus renewable electricity when generation is high and release it during peak demand, non-solar hours or periods of low wind generation. This will help address the intermittent nature of renewable energy, ease grid congestion and improve the reliability and stability of power supply.

PRAGATI-50 to Develop 50 Cities as Models of Urban Cleanliness

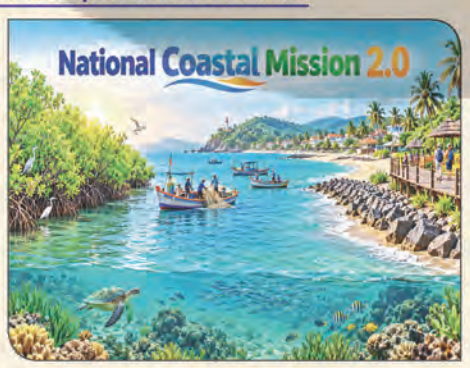

The Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs has launched the PRAGATI-50 initiative to develop 50 cities across 24 States and Union Territories as model cities of cleanliness and sanitation for other urban centres. Selected cities include major administrative and economic centres, culturally important cities, pilgrimage destinations and prominent tourist locations. They will work towards measurable improvements in visible cleanliness, scientific solid-waste management, used-water management, sanitation and citizen participation under the Swachh Bharat Mission-Urban 2.0. Rather than treating cleanliness as an occasional campaign, PRAGATI-50 will follow a structured, time-bound approach. Each city will undertake targeted action based on defined performance indicators, supported by intensive, technology-enabled monitoring and periodic reviews. The initiative is intended to help the selected cities achieve the goal of becoming garbage-free and demonstrate practices that can be replicated across the country.

New Extradition Portal Launched to Accelerate Return of Fugitives

A new Extradition Portal has been launched to strengthen coordination between Central agencies and State police forces and expedite efforts to bring fugitives back to India from other countries. The portal is intended to provide a coordinated mechanism for handling extradition-related cases, reducing delays caused by fragmented communication among different authorities. Launching the portal, Union Home Minister Shri Amit Shah asked State police forces to constitute dedicated teams that would work closely with Central agencies on tracing fugitives, preparing cases and pursuing their return through established international procedures. The portal would facilitate continuous analysis of terrorist incidents, faster inter-agency action and a coordinated long-term strategy for tackling terrorism and transnational criminal networks.

National Coastal Mission 2.0 Moves into Implementation Phase

National Coastal Mission 2.0 is set to move into its implementation phase following the launch of its guidelines by Environment, Forest and Climate Change Minister Shri Bhupender Yadav in New Delhi on September 30, 2026. The Mission will support coastal-vulnerability assessments, ecosystem restoration, pollution management, biodiversity conservation, sustainable tourism, spatial planning, research and capacity building. The guidelines will enable nine coastal States and four Union Territories to plan and execute approved projects under a common framework. The Rs. 767-crore Central Sector Scheme will be implemented until 2030–31. By combining economic development with environmental safeguards, the Mission seeks to unlock the potential of India's blue economy-including fisheries, tourism and other marine-based activities-without compromising the long-term health of coastal ecosystems.

National Livestock Insurance Portal Launched

The Department of Animal Husbandry and Dairying has launched a unified digital portal for livestock insurance under the National Livestock Mission. The platform seeks to simplify the delivery of insurance protection to livestock farmers across the country. It will support policy issuance, claim processing, programme monitoring and reporting through a single integrated system. Authorities will also be able to use real-time information for better coordination, supervision and data-based management of livestock-insurance programmes. To improve accessibility, the portal is available in 11 regional languages in addition to Hindi and English.

US Ends 'Operation Inherent Resolve' in Iraq

The United States has completed the withdrawal of its remaining forces and military equipment from Iraq, formally ending the Iraq-based phase of Operation Inherent Resolve, the campaign launched in 2014 to combat ISIS. The final contingent departed from Erbil Air Base on September 30, 2026. US President Donald Trump described the withdrawal as a victory for the United States and Iraq and a decisive victory over ISIS. The US military said the 12-year campaign had ended ISIS's position as an organised military threat to Iraq and enabled Iraqi forces, including the Kurdish Peshmerga, to assume primary responsibility for the country's security. The withdrawal was carried out under a transition plan agreed by Washington and Baghdad in 2024. It marks a shift from a wartime coalition mission to a more conventional bilateral security relationship. The United States is expected to continue providing targeted training and intelligence assistance to Iraqi forces.

India Warns Citizens Against Joining Russian Armed Forces

The Ministry of External Affairs has issued a fresh advisory asking Indian nationals not to accept offers to join the Russian armed forces, warning that such recruitment exposes individuals to potentially fatal dangers. The advisory follows continuing reports of Indians being recruited through agents, voluntary groups and other non-public organisations. Indian citizens travelling to Russia for employment have been urged to verify job offers carefully and avoid unregistered recruitment agents or individuals making promises of attractive financial benefits. The Ministry said, in some instances, individuals reportedly sought to relinquish their Indian citizenship, acquire Russian passports and then enlist in the Russian armed forces. The government advised citizens to consider the serious and potentially irreversible legal and personal consequences of such decisions, in addition to the mortal risks of deployment in a conflict zone.
