Modern Scientific Missions Shaping Viksit Bharat@2047

Dr. Manish Mohan Gore

Since attaining Independence in 1947, India has made remarkable strides in building scientific institutions, advancing research, and developing indigenous technological capabilities. Building on these achievements, the Government of India has set an ambitious national goal of becoming a Viksit Bharat (Developed India) by 2047—the centenary of its Independence.

The global landscape is undergoing profound transformation. Advances in artificial intelligence, semiconductors, quantum technology, biotechnology, and space science are reshaping economies, industries, and societies, creating unprecedented opportunities as well as complex strategic challenges. Against this backdrop, India's vision of Viksit Bharat @2047 is not merely an aspiration for economic progress but a strategic roadmap for securing long-term technological leadership and sustainable development. To realise this vision, the Government of India has identified several frontier areas of science and technology as national priorities and is making significant investments to strengthen indigenous capabilities, promote innovation, and build a robust research ecosystem.

The Next Pillars of Digital India

Semiconductor chips form the backbone of the digital economy. Almost every modern technology, be it mobile phones, computers, medical equipment, electric vehicles, defence systems, or artificial intelligence is incomplete without them. The global chip crisis during the COVID-19 pandemic made it evident that semiconductor manufacturing is not merely an industrial necessity but a matter of national strategic capability.

With this vision, the India Semiconductor Mission was launched in 2021 with an outlay of approximately Rs. 76,000 crore, to build a robust ecosystem for semiconductor manufacturing, chip design, testing, packaging, and research is being developed in the country. New projects being established in various states, including Gujarat and Assam, represent significant steps towards securing a strong position for India in the global electronics supply chain. Furthermore, this mission will provide fresh momentum to high-skill employment and electronics manufacturing.

Quantum technology is poised to play a transformative role in the next generation of technological advancement and global competitiveness. Recognising its immense potential in areas such as cybersecurity, weather forecasting, artificial intelligence, financial modelling, and drug discovery, the Government of India launched the National Quantum Mission in 2023 with an outlay of Rs. 6,003.65 crore. The mission seeks to build world-class capabilities in quantum computing, quantum communication, quantum sensing, and quantum materials and devices, while strengthening India's research and innovation ecosystem. It is also expected to catalyse high-tech entrepreneurship, support deep-tech startups, and position India as a significant player in the emerging global quantum landscape.

Similarly, the National Supercomputing Mission, launched in 2015, has strengthened India's scientific capabilities. Indigenous supercomputers from the 'Param' and 'Rudra' series are currently playing a vital role in sectors such as weather forecasting, climate change, bioinformatics, defence research, space science, drug discovery, genomics, and aerospace. They reduce dependence on foreign computing resources, accelerate scientific research and innovation, and enhance India's technological self-reliance and global competitiveness in advanced computing. It is evident that initiatives such as semiconductors, quantum technology, and supercomputing are becoming the strong foundation for India's digital economy, national security, and global competitiveness.

Param Supercomputer

While emerging digital technologies are laying the foundation for India's future knowledge economy, the country's scientific ambitions extend far beyond the digital domain. Guided by the vision of Viksit Bharat @2047, India is also harnessing science and technology to address pressing societal challenges, promote sustainable development, strengthen healthcare, ensure energy security, and unlock the potential of its natural resources. From improving farmers' livelihoods and advancing genomic research to exploring the deep oceans and expanding clean nuclear energy, these initiatives demonstrate how scientific innovation is being translated into tangible benefits for both the economy and society.

India's New Space Era

The space programme has emerged as the most inspiring chapter in India's scientific endeavours. Achievements such as Chandrayaan-3 and Aditya-L1 have garnered global recognition for India's scientific prowess. The nation's goal now extends beyond mere satellite launches to ensuring effective participation in human spaceflight, the private space industry, and the global space economy.

Gaganyaan: In this context, the Gaganyaan mission stands out as one of India's most ambitious scientific projects. Approved in 2018, the mission aims to send Indian astronauts into space using indigenous technology. Approval has been granted for an outlay of approximately Rs. 20,193 crore for the expanded scope of the programme. The mission involves the development of cutting-edge technologies, including the human-rated LVM-3 launch vehicle, a crew module, life-support systems, and safe re-entry capabilities. Concurrently, preparations are underway for a future Indian space station and a human lunar mission. Gaganyaan is distinguished not only by its scientific complexity but also by the collaborative participation of public sector undertakings, research institutions, and hundreds of private industries. This collaboration is creating new opportunities in fields such as high-tech manufacturing, aerospace engineering, robotics, electronics, and advanced materials science.

Vikram-1: The most significant transformation in India's space sector in recent years has been the growing participation of private companies and startups. Following the liberalisation of the space sector in 2020 and the establishment of IN-SPACe (Indian National Space Promotion and Authorization Centre), numerous Indian startups have made remarkable strides in areas such as satellites, launch vehicles, Earth observation, and space applications. Today, more than 250 space startups are active in the country, strengthening India's role in the future space economy. This is also creating new opportunities for employment and entrepreneurship for the youth in fields such as research, design, data analysis, artificial intelligence, electronics, and space technology.

Skyroot Aerospace launched 'Vikram-1' (Mission Aagman) on July 18, 2026 from Sriharikota. It became India's first privately developed orbital launch vehicle to successfully reach orbit. Vikram-1 demonstrated India's indigenous private orbital launch capability, boosted commercial space services and the startup ecosystem, and strengthened public-private collaboration.
