India's Inland Waterways

Charting a New Course for Economic Growth

As India expands its inland water transport network, rivers are emerging as important corridors for trade, connectivity and sustainable development. Investment in modern navigation systems, port infrastructure and digital technologies are also opening new avenues for employment and skill development.

India's rivers have shaped its civilisation, supported agriculture and connected communities for centuries. Today, they are assuming a renewed economic role as the country seeks to build a more efficient, affordable and environmentally sustainable transport system. From the Ganga in the north to the Brahmaputra in the northeast and the backwaters of Kerala, inland waterways are increasingly becoming important routes for moving goods and passengers.

Water transport offers significant economic advantages over road and rail transport, particularly in terms of lower freight costs and greater energy efficiency. Moving a tonne of freight by water costs roughly one-third of road transport and half of rail transport. It also produces substantially lower carbon emissions. By shifting suitable bulk cargo to waterways, India can reduce logistics costs, ease congestion on highways and improve the efficiency of its overall transport network. Roads can consequently be used more effectively for passenger movement and time-sensitive deliveries, while waterways complement railways in transporting large volumes of goods over longer distances.

India has declared 111 National Waterways, extending over 20,187 kilometres across 23 States and four Union Territories. Of these, 32 are currently operational. Their growing economic importance is reflected in the remarkable increase in cargo movement, from 29 million metric tonnes (MMT) in 2014–15 to 218 MMT in 2025–26, registering a compound annual growth rate of 20.13 per cent. This growth has already surpassed the 200 MMT target set under Maritime India Vision 2030, demonstrating the increasing use of inland waterways for freight transport and their growing importance in India's logistics network.

Role of Hydrographic Surveys

A river may appear calm and unchanged at the surface, but its underwater conditions can vary considerably. Sandbars may form, water depths may decrease and the deepest navigable channel may shift from one location to another. These changes can affect the safety and movement of cargo vessels.

Hydrographic surveys provide the scientific information needed to understand these conditions. Hydrography involves measuring and mapping the physical characteristics of water bodies, including their depths, bed profiles, flow patterns and possible navigational hazards. The information is used to prepare navigational charts, identify suitable routes and plan infrastructure development.

The Inland Waterways Authority of India (IWAI), the statutory organisation responsible for developing and regulating inland waterways for shipping and navigation, conducts hydrographic surveys across National Waterways.

These include thalweg surveys, which identify and monitor the deepest channel along a river stretch, and terminal and jetty surveys, which assess water depths and approach conditions near cargo-handling facilities.

An important outcome of these surveys is the assessment of Least Available Depth (LAD), or the minimum water depth available along a specified navigation channel during a particular period. LAD helps determine how deeply a vessel can sit in the water, how much cargo it can safely carry and whether a particular route is suitable for navigation.

Where sediment accumulation reduces navigable depth, dredging may be undertaken to remove deposited material and maintain the channel. This process, together with regular surveys, helps ensure that waterways remain suitable for vessel movement.

As of September 2026, regular thalweg surveys were being conducted across 22 National Waterways at weekly, fortnightly or monthly intervals, depending on local requirements. Monitoring also covered the Indian portion of the Indo-Bangladesh Protocol Route, which facilitates cargo movement between the two countries through designated river corridors.

Building Infrastructure for Safe Navigation

Scientific knowledge of river conditions must be supported by reliable infrastructure that guides vessels along safe routes. These facilities, collectively known as Aids to Navigation (AtoN), help vessel operators identify channels, recognise hazards and navigate under varying visibility conditions.

Aids to Navigation include floating buoys, channel markers, beacon lights, radar beacons and lighthouses. A buoy, for instance, may mark the edge of a navigable channel or warn vessels of a submerged obstruction. A lighted beacon provides a visible reference point, particularly during night-time operations.

The Marine Aids to Navigation Act, 2021 provides the statutory framework for these systems. The Directorate General of Lighthouses and Lightships (DGLL) is responsible for general aids to navigation along India's coastline, while IWAI maintains navigation aids across National Waterways.

A notable example is National Waterway-3 in Kerala, comprising the West Coast Canal system between Kottapuram and Kollam, together with the Champakkara and Udyogamandal canals. The navigable stretch is equipped with 312 solar-powered lighted fibre-reinforced plastic buoys and 17 beacon lamp posts to support round-the-clock navigation.

The use of solar-powered equipment also illustrates how modern navigation infrastructure can combine operational efficiency with cleaner energy.

Riverine Lighthouses: A New Chapter on the Brahmaputra

The Brahmaputra is an important transport corridor for northeastern India, where difficult terrain and long distances can make surface connectivity challenging. National Waterway-2 extends from Dhubri to Sadiya in Assam over a navigable length of 891 kilometres. It supports cargo, passenger and tourism activities and serves supply chains associated with commodities such as tea, coal and fertilisers.

In March 2026, India announced its first four riverine lighthouses on the Brahmaputra, to be established at Pandu, Bogibeel, Silghat and Biswanath Ghat.

The Rs. 74-crore project represents an important step towards strengthening round-the-clock inland navigation. Each lighthouse is planned to rise 20 metres above ground, with a geographical range of up to 14 nautical miles and a luminous range of 8–10 nautical miles. Solar power and weather-observation sensors will support their operation.

The project also incorporates facilities such as museums, amphitheatres, cafeterias and landscaped public spaces, linking navigation infrastructure with opportunities for tourism and local economic activity.

The importance of these investments becomes clearer when viewed alongside rising traffic. Cargo movement on NW-2 increased from 0.90 MMT in 2024–25 to 1.29 MMT in 2025–26. Better navigational guidance can help improve the reliability of services as this traffic grows.

Digital Navigation: Making Waterways Smarter

Modern inland navigation depends not only on physical infrastructure but also on the timely availability of accurate information. Vessel operators need to know the available water depth, the location of other vessels, prevailing weather conditions and possible obstacles along their routes.

Digital technologies are helping bring this information together, making river transport safer and more predictable.

Electronic Navigational Charts (ENCs) convert hydrographic survey information into digital maps that vessel operators can use for route planning. As of September 2026, ENCs had been prepared for 18 operational and tidal waterways, compared with their availability only on National Waterway-1 before 2014.

The Portal for Asset and Navigation Information (PANI) provides information on National Waterways, fairways, terminals, jetties, cross-river structures and emergency services. Together with the IWAI Vessel Tracker, it supports access to updated navigation routes, water-depth information and vessel locations.

Another initiative, Naudarshika, launched in 2025, is designed as a National River Traffic and Navigation System. It incorporates real-time Least Available Depth information to help operators make informed navigation decisions.

River Information Services (RIS) further strengthen this digital ecosystem by combining vessel tracking, communication systems and meteorological information. On National Waterway-1, RIS has been implemented across the Haldia–Farakka, Farakka–Patna and Patna–Varanasi stretches. The network includes four control stations and 13 base stations, along with Automatic Identification System (AIS) equipment, Very High Frequency (VHF) communication and weather sensors.

Together, these systems are gradually transforming river navigation from a largely experience-based activity into a more information-driven transport service. Better information can reduce operational uncertainty, support timely decisions and make waterways more attractive to commercial operators.

Linking Waterways with Wider Logistics Network

The economic value of inland waterways increases when they are connected efficiently with roads, railways, ports and industrial centres. A cargo vessel may carry goods over a long river stretch, but those goods must eventually reach a factory, warehouse, market or consumer. This makes multimodal transport infrastructure essential.

The Jal Marg Vikas Project, being implemented on National Waterway-1 along the Ganga–Bhagirathi–Hooghly river system, illustrates this approach. It seeks to strengthen navigation capacity while developing infrastructure that enables goods to move between different modes of transport.

Under the project, multimodal terminals have been developed at Varanasi, Sahibganj and Haldia, along with an intermodal terminal at Kalughat and a new navigational lock at Farakka. Community jetties have also been developed to improve access for settlements along the river.

These facilities have wider economic significance. For industries transporting commodities such as coal, minerals, construction materials and fertilisers, reliable water transport can provide an additional freight option. For farmers, fishing communities and small businesses in riverine areas, improved jetties and connectivity can facilitate access to markets.

The Ministry of Ports, Shipping and Waterways identifies coal, iron ore, containerised and general cargo, minerals, building materials, fly ash and petroleum products among the commodities transported through inland waterways.

An efficient inland waterway network can therefore contribute to industrial competitiveness while supporting more balanced regional development.

Encouraging Greater Use of Waterways

Expanding inland water transport requires both infrastructure development and commercial participation. The Government has introduced measures to encourage cargo owners, logistics operators and private investors to use and develop National Waterways.

The Jalvahak Scheme, introduced to promote cargo movement, provides financial incentives of up to 35 per cent of eligible operating expenditure for waterway journeys. Such incentives can encourage businesses to consider inland water transport as an alternative to conventional freight routes.

The National Waterways (Construction of Jetties/Terminals) Regulations, 2025 facilitate private participation in developing and operating terminals. The Jal Samriddhi portal supports the application process for the required permissions, helping simplify infrastructure development.

The Government is also promoting public-private partnerships in terminal operations and maintenance.

Looking ahead, the Maritime Amrit Kaal Vision 2047 sets a target of increasing inland water transport's share of freight movement from around 2 per cent to 5 per cent, with traffic expected to exceed 500 MMT by 2047. The number of operational National Waterways is also targeted to rise beyond 50.

These targets indicate that inland waterways are being developed not as a replacement for roads and railways, but as an important component of an integrated national transport system.

Employment and Skill Development Opportunities

The expansion of inland waterways also has important implications for employment. Developing and operating a modern water transport network requires professionals with skills in engineering, navigation, logistics, technology and infrastructure management.

Hydrographic surveys create demand for surveyors, hydrographers, geospatial specialists and technical personnel who can measure river conditions and prepare navigational charts. Fairway development and dredging require civil and marine engineers, dredger operators, technicians and maintenance workers. The construction and operation of terminals and jetties can generate opportunities in cargo handling, warehousing, equipment maintenance, transport coordination and logistics management.

As digital navigation expands, opportunities may also emerge for professionals in electronics, telecommunications, information technology, GIS mapping and vessel traffic monitoring. River cruise tourism, passenger ferry services, vessel construction and ship repair offer further avenues for skilled and semi-skilled workers.

The Ministry of Ports, Shipping and Waterways has specifically identified river cruise tourism, vessel design and operations, terminal construction, maintenance dredging, navigation aids, river engineering and hydrology as areas with employment and skill-development potential.

For young jobseekers, relevant educational pathways include civil, mechanical, electrical, electronics and marine engineering; geography and geospatial studies; logistics and supply-chain management; and vocational training for vessel and terminal operations. Government skill-development programmes also cover maritime-related occupations, including vessel operators, port signalmen and logistics personnel.

The proposed development of training institutions and specialised skill centres can help prepare the workforce needed by the expanding sector.

Importantly, the benefits need not remain confined to large transport hubs. Better river connectivity can support local boat operators, small traders, tourism enterprises and service providers, creating livelihood opportunities in communities situated along National Waterways.

Towards a Sustainable and Connected Future

India's inland waterways development represents a broader change in the country's approach to transport planning. Rivers are increasingly being viewed not merely as natural resources, but also as economic corridors capable of connecting production centres, markets and communities.

Their long-term success will depend on maintaining reliable navigation depths, strengthening links with other transport modes, ensuring safety, encouraging commercial use and addressing environmental concerns. Continued investment in hydrographic surveys, navigation aids, digital platforms and skilled manpower will be essential.

With cargo movement increasing and new infrastructure taking shape, inland waterways have the potential to make India's logistics network more efficient, reduce pressure on roads and railways, strengthen regional connectivity and support employment. By combining the country's river systems with modern technology and infrastructure, India is laying the groundwork for a transport ecosystem that is more integrated, resilient and sustainable. (Compiled by EN Team with Inputs from PIB)

India-New Zealand FTA Opens Duty-Free Market Access, Employment Opportunities

The India–New Zealand Free Trade Agreement took effect on October 20, 2026, giving Indian goods duty-free access to the New Zealand market. The agreement is expected to benefit exporters in textiles, footwear, engineering, pharmaceuticals and agriculture, particularly small businesses, artisans and women entrepreneurs. For Indian job seekers, it provides annual quotas of 5,000 Temporary Employment Entry visas and 1,000 Working Holiday visas. Indian students will have post-study work rights of up to three years for STEM Bachelor's and Master's graduates and four years for doctoral scholars. New Zealand has committed US$20 billion in investment into India. Agricultural cooperation will include technology transfer and training as well as Centres of Excellence for apples, kiwifruit and honey.

India and Poland to Expand Technology and Energy Cooperation

India and Poland have agreed to strengthen cooperation in defence, space and nuclear energy following talks between Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi and Polish Prime Minister Mr. Donald Tusk in New Delhi. The partnership will focus on critical and emerging technologies, cybersecurity and defence innovation. Both countries also agreed to develop trusted supply chains and work towards doubling bilateral trade by 2030. Space cooperation will involve closer engagement between institutions and businesses. The talks also identified opportunities in semiconductors, battery recycling and rare-earth refining-sectors important to electronics manufacturing and clean-energy technologies. The two countries are exploring collaboration in geology, mining and critical minerals and negotiating a memorandum of understanding. These efforts aim to connect technological cooperation with trade and industrial development.

NSDC Taps Social Stock Exchange to Train Youth for Overseas Jobs

The National Skill Development Corporation (NSDC) made its debut on the NSE Social Stock Exchange on October 22, 2026, using a new funding approach to help disadvantaged youth prepare for overseas employment. The exchange provides a platform for raising money for social development projects. The Rs. 11.25 crore initiative will support 600 youth from economically weaker OBC households in Madhya Pradesh. The NSDC International will provide residential language and employability training, preparing 300 candidates for opportunities in Japan and another 300 for Germany. The focus will include sectors like caregiving, hospitality, construction and manufacturing. Beneficiaries will contribute 15% of the programme cost, while funds raised through the exchange will cover 35%. The Madhya Pradesh government will meet the remaining 50% upon successful overseas placement, linking its funding to employment outcomes.

India Hosts Agrivoltaics Meet to Combine Farming with Solar Power

India hosted the Agrivoltaics World Conference from October 21-23, 2026, marking the event's first edition in the Global South. The conference focused on using the same land for crop cultivation and solar electricity generation, offering farmers a potential additional source of income. Agrivoltaics involves installing solar panels above farmland while retaining space for crops and agricultural machinery. Discussions pivoted around designs suited to small and marginal farmers, including adequate panel height, spacing, drainage and rainwater harvesting. The government announced plans to expand agrivoltaics under the next phase of PM-KUSUM, which supports solar energy use in agriculture. Elevated solar structures can cost 25-30% more than conventional ground-mounted installations, making suitable financing and technical support important. The conference also highlighted opportunities to train rural youth and women in equipment operation, repair and maintenance, helping create local employment alongside clean-energy generation.
